"I'll bet the old uniform that Babb left in his looker against the price tag in Keldum's Panama hat that the sprinkling cart union decided to boycott our winning streak," said George Hogriever about 5 p'clock yesterday afternoon when Umpire Tindill called the second game between Undianapolis and Milwaukee at the end of fourth inning on account of rain with the score 6 to 4 in favor of Indianapolis, "You see we made it ten straight when we clinched the first game, and when 'Woodie' ripped the seams for a three-bagger in the Yourth inning of the second game, sending Heydon and me across the rubber with two runs to the good the walking delegate of that watered-stock union put us on the funfair list and opened the valves. But at that Tindill could have stretched a point and compelled Milwaukee to go to bat as dt only required the first half of the fifth to make it a game, providing, of course, the Brewers did not skip the ball across the wet grass out of our way. It was a blasted shame to have two games so closely won and then only get half satisfaction with one victory." Hogriever took the matter to heart and so did all the rest of the Indianapolis players and the 1,500 fans who refused to Matthews and Hutchinson Have be frightened by the sassy-looking clouds. The bill of fare for the afternoon called for two victories, but as Hogriever said, the sprinkling cart drivers' union was against Indianapolis. The first game will go into the victory column of the Indianapolis team. The Hoosiers were the most successful mudders and Killen showed such wonderful speed and control that there was only one inning on the score board that showed anything but ciphers for the Milwankers. Of all the sensational catches that have been made at Washington Park George Hogriever carried off the prize yesterday. It was even said after his wonderful performance that he spends part of his winter days in Wisconsin turning somersaults. He must have had great training in this line, for in the eighth inning he came in from deep right after a line drive by Mc-Bride and gathered in the ball by making a long dive for it. As soon as the ball struck his glove he squeezed it, and then, ducking his head, did a somersault in tumble-bug fashion, coming upon his feet like a "human rubber ball." And Hogriever did not drop the ball during his twisting journey over the damp sward. That was not the only clever piece of work displayed by him, for in the second inning he made a throw to first, cutting off a Junner, and also made a good catch in the fourth. In the second game a remarkable catch and great throw to first prevented the Brewers | Contest Was Close, Being Tied in the from adding a tally.

All members of the band of pennant hunters offered some help to the victory in the first game. Kuhns did it with his stick and good field work and Woodruff gathered in five difficult chances and made two hits. Kihm could not find safe territory, but he offered a corner of his anatomy as a sacrifice and allowed the pitcher to hit him twice without offering a word of complaint. O'Brien was a good mud horse and his eye was on the sphere. Coulter's one chance was a difficult one, but after clasping his hands in silent prayer he gathered it in without getting his feet wet. Fox had a glorious time at second and Heydon and Killen enjoyed the festivielped to make the grand result.

Milwaukee did not score in the second, while Indianapolis made one after Coulter forced Kihm and Fox and Heydon hit safely. Two bases on balls sandwiched between two hits gave Milwaukee two in the third. In the last half of that inning a base on balls to Hogriever, Kuhns's sacrifice, Woodruff's single, O'Brien's two-bagger and Coulter's single gave Indianapolis three. A single base on balls and McBride's two-bagger gave Milwaukee enough to tie the score in the fourth.
